

Miss Olive Lombard, who is soon to become the bride of Mr. Clifford Brautigam of Armona, was given a delightful miscellaneous shower on Tuesday evening, at the home of Miss Muriel Mouser, by the members of the Queen Esther society of the First Methodist church.

It fell on the evening of a meeting of that society and was a complete surprise to Miss Lombard. She became suddenly aware of an unusual feature of the regular meeting when the daintily spread tables were spied. The tables, four in number, with covers laid for 16, were adorned with kewpies, with kewpie place cards and other things suggestive of the important event to come.

A table set apart for the bride-to-be was strikingly suggestive. In its center an improvised altar had been arranged and thereat, beneath a canopy of smilax, the most complete of kewpies, dressed like bride and bridegroom, foretold the future "ordeal."

A course luncheon was served and between the courses the guests wrote out their favorite recipes for the future housewife. The shower was made up of a great variety of pretty and useful articles, each of which was located in its place of hiding by a descriptive verse. The wedding is one of the fall nuptial events now near at hand.
